THAT the last Coolie Ordinance has the apground to alleviate the fears which must naturally arise as to the probable effects of Gaol, sworn, stated he knew the defendant by so sweeping a measure. His Excellency the Governor was careful to inform the Council that the draft Ordinance has received the sanction of the Secretary of Stateand expressed somewhat sharply his disap pointment that there had been so much delay in passing it through the Council, in consequence of the discussions among the legal gentlemen. So strongly did the Governor feel upon the subject, that he for a moment overlooked his usual graciousness, as it was hardly complimentary to the learned gentlemen, who, whether their opinions individually or collectively were right or wrong, had taken considerable pains with regard to the matter, to tell them plainly and unreservedly that he did not think they had much improved the original draft. We allude to this incident only to show the amount of empressement, which evidently influences the Government, and His-Except ener as the depresentative the pipe it was worth $8. He found a

BEFORE F. W. MITCHELL, Esq.

UTTERING A DRAFT. Mr. A. A. Pereira, of the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank, charged a Portuguese named V. Macedo, with attempting to obtain money from the Bank, by the presentation of a draft

Complainant stated at about 12.30 on the 6th instant, the defendant came to the bank and presented a draft belonging to the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank, endorsed on the back by Mr. George, one of the clerks in the Bank, pay able to the Bank. He asked the defendant HALL&HOLTZ and KELLY what he wanted, and he said the money, and looked surprised when be told him that the paper was one of the Bank's own, and he could receive no money on that, it being a draft to pay money into the bank. He asked him where he got it, and at first he answered in a very confused way, and on being asked again, he said he got if from a Chilian, named Jose Pedro Corres. He asked him his name, and he gave it as Antonio Shaluier, but he afterwards ascertained that was not his name. He informed him be could not get money on the draft, but he would give bim a memorandom to the parties from whom he got it, not deeming at the time that he was making an attempt to swindle. After be had written the memorandum, he found that the defendant had disappeared. He reported the circumstances to the manager, and he told him to make all the enquiries be could with a view to New York, Messes. S. M. Pettingill & Co. | the defendant's apprehension. He accordingly went to the Police Station, and made a report giving the description of the defendant, and he recompanied Mr. Gair, the acting Inspector, to the Macao steamer, and there waited till the last moment of the steamer's starting, when the defendant came on board, and be at once recognised him as the man, and gave him into custody. The defendant denieds the attempt to pass the draft, but he was certain defendant was the man who came to the Bank, and a clerk at the Bank also saw him. Acting Inspector W. F. Gair, sworn, stated he accompanied Mr. Pereira on the 6th instant to the Macao steamer, and just before she storted the defendant arrived, and was pointed out by the gentleman, and he arrested him, and took bim to the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank, where he was examined by Mr. Smith and Mr. proval of the Home Government is the only | Symonds, and he afterwards took him to the Complainant stated on Sanday last he bought a meerschaum pipe from the second defendant for $1.50, at his stall in Lower Luscar-row. On bearing of a similar pipe being lost, he went to the second detendant and asked him where he get it from, and he pointed out the first defendant, and as he could not account how he got it, he took them both into custody.

First defendant said that he got it from a Chinese servant boy, who told him his master gave it to bim in consequence of its being broken. Second defendant said he was only acting as agent for the first defendant in the sule of the

The bridesmaids as well us the bride had for days watched with anxiety the coming event; the bridal dress was prepared, and the bridegroom with his best man bad arrived in the city and taken rooms at the Grosvenor Hotel The wedding breakfast, too, had been prepared a la fourchette by Messre. Bolland and Sons, for a party of about 45, the same firm supplying the wedding cake. The bride's home being small, but comfortable, a marquee had been erected with boarded floor for the purposes of the wedding breakfast, and also the ball which was to have been held there in the evening. The wedding carriages and pairs, six in number, had been ordered from the Grosvenor Hotel drawer. He had some time to consider it; but Company, and, in short, everything had been prepared for the due celebration of the bappy event, but at the last moment, a most unfortunate contretemps occurred, and the ceremony was fortunately, or unfortunately, we won't pretend to say, "off." We learn from reports that have reached us that the young people whose destinies were to have been linked together "for better for worse," &c., had known each other for the space of a few months, and that the "gentleman" was considered to be a good "chance;" at any rate he was full of the most likely assurances as to his position and prospects in the world, and so completely carried the young lady's parents with him in those important little matters in match-making that they altogether neglected to inquire into the truth of the young gullant's statements. Had the heads of the two families come together, is thrally the extreme unpleasantness that has followed would have been avoided. As we have before stated, everything went as merry as possible until the eleventh bour, when the brother of the young hady in question discovered that the real state of the case did not at all coincide with the very assuring language used by the young Adonis as to his exact position in the world, and at once all orders in connection with the interesting ceremony were countermanded. The advance of Mr. Plimsoll's movement on behalf of scamen shows what may be done by an energetic and presevering man, who is content to sacrifice time, money, and comfort to an object he has earnestly at heart. Mr. Plimsoll has provoked a good deal of obloquy, he has made himself some bitter enemies, and he is even threatened with more than one action for libel. Yet already he receives an instalment of his reward, and in a shape more tangible than that of an approving conscience.

Only a year ago the abuses which he demonstrated and denounced were more flagrant than they are now that he has moved in the matter. More ships went down at sea, over-insured. overladen, and under manned; yet, save for an incidental but pregnant allusion in the report of the Board of Trade, or an occasional indignent article in the papers, what was heard or known of the matter? Few people saw the Board of Trade reports, and those who read the newspaper articles dismissed the unpleasant subject from their minds with a "how shocking!" The "sinners" in the shipowning trade to whom Mr. Plimsolt has made allusion, went on sinning in nearly absolute immunity from public censure. They might be better known than respected on the wharves where their men were enumed and their vessels were from Land's End to New York. The work is overladen, but no one who met them inquired progressing rapidly, and is expected to be too closely how they had come by the money completed in May or June. She has just been with which they had bought their position. Now, although it would be far too much to say that offences of the kind have ceased, we may be sure that they are far less frequent. Me with any characters or in a large way of trade are bound to be cautious on the eye of a publi inquiry which may be searching. It would be too much to aver that offences of this kind have ceased, for Mr. Plimsoll said enough at Leeds on Sunday to show that some of the hardened "sinners " he has in his eye still go on sinning. But they do so at much greater risk of reputation than formerly. Thanks to Mr. Phinsoll, the matter has laid fast hold of the public mind. contract, the case is certain to be brought under for all kinds. the notice of the public and the House. LOVE OF COUNTRY AND HOME. The love of country and the love of home are products of the same propensity of atinchment directed to things instead of persons. These emotions are evoked by the momories of places and persons awakened by the presentment to the mind of names that -suggest a whole word of past pleasures and distant dear ones for ever associated with the localities where they were enjoyed. In his "Farmer of Tilbury Vale," Wordsworth has admirably described the expression of this powerful emotion as evoked in old Adam, the yeoman who, when ruined in his fields and compelled to carn a lovelihood amid the smoke and din of London, and sought to recall some of his past country pleasures, to forget the painful present and for awhile to live again in the happy past. Thus does the poet, often the truest and profoundest philosopher, interpret in action the faculty of attachment.

In the throng of the Town like a stranger is he, Like one whose own country's far over the Sea; And Nature, while through the great city he hies Full ten times a day takes his heart by surprise.

Mid coaches and chariots a waggon of straw Like a magnet the heart of old Adam can draw With a thousand soft pictures his memory wil

Up the Haymarket Hill he oft whistles his way, Thrust his hands in the waggon, and smells at the He thinks of the fields he so often has mown, And is happy as if the rich freight were his own.

But chiefly to Smithfield he loves to repair, If you pass by at morning you'll meet with him

The breath of the cows you may see him inhale; But his heart all the while is in Tilbury Valo. -From " What am I?" by Edward William Coz.

A LUSHIA CHIEFTAIN'S TOMB. Voupilal's house occupied a space forty yards long and almost fifteen broad, as shewn still by a few uprights and remnants of foundations, and at the south end of its site is the tomb, a curious structure consisting of a platform of rough flag-stones and wood, about seventeen feet square and three feet high. In the centre grows a young banian tree, brought from below, which seems to be flourishing in its elevated home. The whole is surrounded by tall posts or trunks of small trees, each crowned with the skulls of some animal or animals slain in the chase; among them are elephants, tigers, metuas, wild boar, deer, &c. Of the metua, there are some thirty . or forty heads, round or near the tomb, and we' also found the head of a Munipuri pony, presented by the new rajah of that country to ject; "but that they get from me." Voupilal a few years before. There were two other smaller platforms surrounded with Herr Droigel. "Whenever we meet genius, skulls close by, but for what purpose and with what intention they were erected, we It is she—it is from her—" were unable to find out. No human skulls were discovered, although it is known that at least one Naga captive was slain at his death. Standing mother's statement, she seemed to prefer about are curiously shaped posts branching having the music before her, and had selectout at the top, like the letter Y, and some ed a song then not long published, which by ten feet high; these, we were told, were all sacrificial posts, on which metuas and other animals are sacrificed at the death of a chief. The tomb is visible for miles around; a black speek, on a long bare yellow ridge, marking the spot where among the ruins of the villages, the mountain breezes for ever meaning over the sad deserted scene, rest the remains of the once powerful Lushai chieftain.—From EVILS OF OVER-ACTIVITY. Pascal said that most of the evils of life arose from "man's being unable to sit still in a room;" and, though I do not go-that length, it is certain that we should have been a far wiser race than we are if we had been readier to sit quiet-we should have known much better the way in which it was best to act when we came to act. The rise of physical spirale, the first great body of practical truth Trevable to all men, exemplifies this in the plainest way. If it had not been for quiet people, who sat still and studied the other sections of the cone, if other people had not sat still and studied the theory of in- ladies and middle-aged ladies, who say with finitesimals, or other quiet people had not a sweetly conscious smile and simper, intendsat still and worked out the doctrine of ed to be modest and attractive, that they chances, the most "dreamy moonshine," as | "sing a little," I had no experience, When the purely practical mind would consider, of I left school I left behind me also the feeble all human pursuits; if "idle star-gazers" wailings of British incompetency, and therehad not watched long and carefully the mo- fore while I expected to find Jemima's pertions of the heavenly bodies-our modern formance bad, I was utterly unprepared for astronomy would have been impossible, and, the depths of musical, or rather non-musical without our astronomy, "our ships, our depravity which she sounded. science came so late into the world, and is on "Sw hay thee," which was more than I so small and scanty still, that will convince expected, and triumphantly delivered hermost people that our over-activity is a very self of great evil. But this is only part, and perhaps not the greatest part, of the harm, that over-activity does. As I have said, it is inherited from times when life was simple. objects were plain, and quick action generally led to desirable ends. If A kills B before B kills A, then A survives and the human race is a race of A's. But the issues of life are_plain no longer. To act rightly in modern society requires a great deal previous study, a great deal of assimilated information, a great deal of sharpened imagination; and these prerequisites of sound action require much time, and I was going to say, much "lying in the sun," a long period of "mere passiveness.". Even the art of killing one another, which at first particularly trained men to be quick, now requires them to be slow. A hasty general is the worst of generals nowadays; the best is a sort of von Moltke, who is passive, if any man ever was passive; who is "silent in seven languages;" who possesses more and better accumulated information as to the best way of killing people than any one who ever lived. This man plays a restrained of that famous speech made by a bishop, who considerate game of chess with his I wish the art of benefiting men had kept pace with the art of destroying them; for, though war has become slow, philanthropy has remained hasty. The most melancholy of human reflections, perhaps, is that, on the whole, it is a question whether the benevolence of mankind does most good or harm. Great good, no doubt, philanthropy does, but then it also does great evil. It augments so much vice, it multiplies so much suffering, it brings to life such great populations to suffer and to be vicious, that it is open to argument whether it be or be not an evil to the world, and this is entirely because excellent people fancy that they can do much by rapid action—that they will most benefit the world when they most relieve their own feelings; that, as soon as an evil is seen. satisfactory, as no blame could in that case "something" ought to be done to stay and prevent it. One may incline to hope that the balance of good over evil is in favor of benevolence; one can hardly bear to think she commenced, played a false note—another, that it is not so; but anyhow it is certain and yet another.
